Topic – should travel or work

Point 1 – academic development – witness future study with stronger motivation

Point 2 – communications skills – practice comm skills – better comm with students and professors

Point 3 & concession – relax physically and mentally for better study

We cannot deny that travelling or work before university might break the continuity in study, which leads many to believe that high school graduates shall attend university without any practical experience. However, in my opinion, as far as academic development, communication skills, and health are concerned, school graduates should travel or work before university for better results of later higher education. (61 words)

1. break the continuity in study
打破学习连贯性

First, students obtain a better understanding in their future field of study through traveling or working. To be more specific, through an internship or full-time job, students witness the true nature of their future majors and are able to better relate what they will learn to the reality; meanwhile, traveling experience also enables students to see the application of their future study in the society, which helps them realize the meaning of their academic pursuit and career for a stronger motivation in study. Topic – should travel or work

Point 1 – academic development – witness future study with stronger motivation

Point 2 – communications skills – practice comm skills – better comm with students and professors

Point 3 & concession – relax physically and mentally for better study

Second, the fact that university study requires strong communication skills indicates that students ought to expose themselves to the real world before university. For instance, traveling experience hones one's skills in communicating with those from totally different cultural backgrounds, while work experience develops one's skills in giving and receiving ideas, and working with others as a team. All these are essential skills for exchanging ideas with others and working on group projects in university. (74 words)

Still, some might claim that a gap between high school and university breaks the continuity in study, hindering student's focus and effectiveness in study. However, the practical experience, in the form of work or traveling, is also an excellent chance for students to relax both physically and mentally, which better prepares them for a totally different academic environment in university. (60 words)

In conclusion, work and traveling experience prepares students for their future academic pursuit, and it shall be strongly encouraged to high school graduates. (23 words)

Topic – Positive – efficiency, economy, social relationship

Point 1 – Efficiency – shopping, life & work, communication

Point 2 – Economy – example of eBay

Point 3 & Concession – Weaker social V.S. stronger network & time saved

It cannot be denied that the widespread use of the Internet in almost every corner of the world sets some distance between us. However, as far as the efficiency in life and work, social economic development, and social relationship are concerned, I strongly believe that such a trend is positive.

First, the wide application of the Internet greatly boosts efficiency in both daily life and work. To be more specific, we can easily fulfill our shopping needs by browsing millions of products on a cellphone without leaving home, and have our order delivered as soon as on the same day; besides, easier access to information worldwide via the internet helps us solve problems, ranging from how to cook a steak properly to how to apply a formula on a Microsoft Excel spreadsheet; last but not the least, we can reach almost anyone, including but not limited to family members and coworkers, whenever we want and wherever we are.

1. in almost every corner of the world 在世界上几乎每一个角落

2. set some distance between us 在我们之间放置了些许距离 (拉远了我们)

3. fulfill our shopping needs by browsing millions of products on a cellphone 在手机上浏览成千上万的商品来满足我们的购物需求

4. easier access to information 更容易获取信息(这件事)

5. whenever we want and wherever we are 无论何时何地

Topic – Positive – efficiency, economy, social relationship

Point 1 – Efficiency – shopping, life & work, communication

Point 2 – Economy – example of eBay

Point 3 & Concession – Weaker social V.S. stronger network & time saved

Secondly, the fact that the Internet promotes social economic development through connecting consumers and businesses indicates that it's a positive social trend. Take the online shopping site eBay for example – for decades it not only allows businesses to sell to individual customers directly, but enables individuals to sell anything to the whole world as well, facilitating stronger social economy, communication, and equity.

6. connecting consumers and businesses 衔接消费者和商家

However, some might claim that the internet sets people apart as we no longer conduct face-to-face communication, which damages our social relationships. Ironically, in such a way, the Internet actually saves our time from fragmented daily face-to-face communication, leaving us more time for deep conversations in life and work; in addition, the Internet also helps us maintain our network since we can contact old friends and beloved ones, and inform them of our recent life very conveniently via social media.

In conclusion, the universal application of the Internet in the world we live in is a revolutionary change that is propelling the development of our civilization.

Cause 1 – Economy and tech – more affordable and more people to buy

Cause 2 – Modern media promotes the trend / businesses use ads

Effects – Good & Bad: better quality of life and economy; anxiety and health issues

Today, people around the world use various ways on their appearance to make them look younger, including but not limited to working out, cosmetics, and plastic surgeries. In my opinion, there are multiple reasons behind this social development.

First, the desire for a younger appearance is almost a human instinct, and people have been trying long in the process of human civilization to make themselves look younger – it's a way of showing vigor, capability, and fertility. For example, as early as during the Roman times people started using dyes to turn their aging grey hair back to pitch black. In the modern world, the rapid development of economy and technology has not only granted people the financial power to do so, but provides more affordable and effective approaches. Thus, people are simply doing what they have been doing for long, but now on a much larger scale.

1. in the process of human civilization 在人类文明的进程里
2. a way of showing vigor, capability, and fertility 一种展示活力, 能力, 和生育力的方式
3. granted people the financial power to do so 给予人们这么做的经济实力
4. on a much larger scale 以更大的规模

11

Cause 1 – Economy and tech – more affordable and more people to buy

Cause 2 – Modern media promotes the trend / businesses use ads

Effects – Good & Bad: better quality of life and economy; anxiety and health issues

Second, the development of modern media, from the TV era to today's era of internet and social media, is also the catalyst in this trend. For example, people see more attractive young characters on screens, admiring them and starting mimicking. Besides, businesses use the screens to promote their products and services via showing young and vigorous figures, such as gym services and cosmetics, which stimulates people's consumption in the field.

Such a trend has its positive effect but not without potential drawbacks: for individuals, it creates a market in which people are able to fulfill their intrinsic desire of looking younger, building a stronger personal confidence and enhancing the quality of life; on the societal level, it creates an industry that promotes economic development. However, in the meantime, we shall also be aware of traps of consumerism and materialism, as certain merchants simply take advantage of some people's lack of confidence in appearance and lead them into an anxiety for the purpose of selling products. In this way, we not only lose money but might damage our physical and mental health, causing severe consequences.

5. the catalyst in this trend 这一波趋势中的催化剂
6. admire them and start mimicking 崇拜他们并且开始模仿
7. stimulate people's consumption in the field 刺激人们在相应领域的消费
8. fulfill their intrinsic desire of looking younger 满足他们发自内心想要看上去更年轻的欲望
9. traps of consumerism and materialism 消费主义和物质主义的陷阱
10. lead them into an anxiety for the purpose of selling products 把他们引入焦虑来售卖产品

Point 2 – diverse values and reasons

Concession & Ending – some work hard for money, most not

The quality of our material life has been improved significantly in the past decades due to rapid development in economy, which leads some to believe that the purpose of our diligence is wealth. However, I disagree with such a claim due to people's diverse pursuits and values.

First, we cannot deny the fact that many devote tons of time and effort for a higher pay. However, it is not correct to deem earning money as the only intrinsic reason behind such diligence. For example, one might work hard for money, but the main aim is actually to support the family, such as paying for the outrageously expensive fees for his or her kid's IELTS test; another might work hard to make money for the eventual realization of his or her passion, such as traveling the world. Thus, even if many work very hard for money, such an act is a vehicle, a means, instead of the reason behind.

Topic – Most crimes due to external factors, “bad nature” crimes due to social negligence

Point 1 – Effect of social and economic factors on crimes

Point 2 – Connection between “bad nature” crimes and social factors

Today, there is a heated debate on the root causes of crimes: some claim crimes as the result of external factors such as poverty while others think that crimes are caused by people bad by nature. In my opinion, most crimes are the result of external factors, while crimes due to “bad nature” are also the result of external circumstances, namely social negligence. (64 words)

First, social and economic conditions are key external factors in determining people’s values and behavioral tendencies, also the most important external variables on crimes. To be more specific, a lack in financial resources could prevent one’s access to education, and then further limits his or her access to decent jobs, driving him or her toward crime as the only means of survival and forming a vicious cycle in the family and neighborhood; in addition, those who grow up in a family without proper guidance or a neighborhood prevalent with crimes could lack appropriate moral values and even treat crimes as a norm. As a result, a systematic campaign against poverty and social injustice would be the solution to such crimes. (120 words)

Topic – Most crimes due to external factors, “bad nature” crimes due to social negligence

Point 1 – Effect of social and economic factors on crimes

Point 2 – Connection between “bad nature” crimes and social factors

Still, we cannot deny the fact that certain individuals are born with personality disorders, such as a genetic irritability, lack of empathy and sympathy, resulting in a “bad nature” and their criminal behaviors later in life. However, such crimes are exactly the result of a negligence from the society, which eventually get them lost on their path and succumb to the desire of crime. In other words, external social elements such as guidance from family, supportive systems including but not limited to special education and proper medical treatment, and a tolerant social atmosphere can together form a synergy and work toward effective crime prevention, and even turn these individuals who are “bad by nature” into productive and valuable components of the society. (122 words)

In conclusion, crime is a complex issue, and it is the construction of a healthy and supportive social environment that can best prevent crimes. With appropriate external intervention, even those with inherent mental or phycological issues could grow to be talents, staying away from crime. (45 words)

Today, there is a heated debate on the root causes of crimes: some claim crimes as the result of external factors such as poverty while others think that crimes are caused by people bad by nature. In my opinion, most crimes are the result of external social factors, while crimes due to "bad nature" are also the result of external circumstances, namely social negligence. (64 words)

First, social and economic conditions are key social factors in determining people's values and behavioral tendencies, also the most important external variables on crimes. To be more specific, a lack in financial resources could prevent one's access to education, and then further limits his or her access to decent jobs, driving him or her toward crime as the only means of survival and forming a vicious cycle in the family and neighborhood; in addition, those who grow up in a family without proper guidance or a neighborhood prevalent with crimes could lack appropriate moral values and even treat crimes as a norm.
